Cindy Haines, Psy.D. Presented on "Being a Parent with OCD"

by Rachel Strohl, Psy.D.

On Monday December 14, 2009, Cindy Haines, Psy.D. presented at the quarterly meeting of the NJ Obsessive Compulsive Foundation. Dr. Haines received her doctorate in clinical psychology from the Graduate School of Applied and Professional Psychology at Rutgers University. She is a NJ licensed psychologist practicing at Stress and Anxiety Services of New Jersey in East Brunswick.

Dr. Haines presentation focused on how parents with OCD "can parent a child without impacting them because of their own OCD." The prevalence rate for OCD is 2 to 2.5% of the population. The risk increases to 10 to 20% when a family member is diagnosed with OCD.

She explained that parents with OCD may "look" less warm and loving toward their children; this perception is quite untrue but the stress of the disorder may perpetuate the misperception. She also discussed the difference between "normal worry" which is a natural part of parenting, and "obsessive worry" which is excessive and causes great distress. Parents should monitor that their own OCD thoughts and behaviors (e.g., perfectionistic desires, repeated questioning, rigid rule making) do not set children up for unrealistic standards, which in turn could develop more anxious and fearful children.

Dr. Haines outlined the following

Dr. Allen Weg to Present at Next Quarterly Meeting

Our next quarterly NJOCF meeting will be held on Monday, March 8th, 2010 at 7:30 p.m., at Robert Wood Johnson Hospital in New Brunswick. Dr. Allen H. Weg, Vice President of NJOCF, will be presenting.

The title of the presentation is, "The Enemy Within: Getting Aggressive with OCD." Dr. Weg explains, "The premise is that a person can think about OCD as a separate, sentient, being, more than just a bully, but a true enemy whose existence depends on dominating the life of the OCD-afflicted person (and sometimes family members or friends), and whose strength is defined by how much of that life is under its control. Once this premise is met, much of what is experienced by the person with OCD can make sense in a whole new way. This in turn results in significant implications for therapeutic interventions."

Attendees will explore their relationship with OCD within a combative context, which will help to shape their cognitive and behavioral responses to OCD challenges. In addition, attendees will learn to become more aggressive towards their OCD, and replace fear with anger, utilizing specific cognitive interventions whilst engaged in behavioral ERP strategies.

Dr. Allen Weg is founder and director of Stress and Anxiety Services of New Jersey, a private practice of licensed psychologists in East Brunswick, all of whom specialize in the cognitive behavioral therapy of anxiety disorders, with an emphasis on the treatment of OCD and OCD spectrum disorders. In addition to NJOCF, Dr. Weg is also on the Board of Directors for the Middlesex County Association of Psychologists and the New Jersey Association of Cognitive Behavioral Psychologists.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Dear Friends:

Welcome to 2010, the beginning of a new decade and hopefully the beginning of a successful, healthy, and happy year.

The NJ OCF was pleased and excited to receive newspaper coverage in the The Star-Ledger, front page, of the NJ section, on December 27, 2009. The article highlighted the mission of the organization and helped spread the word on OCD and that with proper treatment, life can return to "normal." From the article, I am pleased to report that the NJ OCF hotline started to ring immediately and didn't stop for days.

Hope to see everyone at our March meeting.

Sincerely,
President Ina Spero

Cutting Toenails (Who should be in control of the direction and speed of treatment?)

by Dr. Allen H. Weg, Ed.D.

When my daughter was very young, one of our rituals every couple of weeks was to cut her toenails after one of her baths. There were a couple of times early on where I cut the nail a little too close to the skin, and the skin broke ever so slightly, so that there was this tiniest hint of blood visible at the skin line. On these occasions, my daughter, especially after having seen the blood (which practically required a microscope to actually identify) would get hysterical. After calming her down (or getting her mother to come finish the job) she would be very resistant to further toenail cutting. Whatever we did, we had to do it quickly, and clip the nails only at the outer edges, as far away from the skin as possible. Sometimes we had to just give it up for another day.

When enough time passed, and we did get around to addressing her growing toenails once again, she was extremely anxious and resistant to our attempts to approach her with nail clippers. She would ultimately comply, but would yell at us if she felt we were cutting her nails too close to the skin, and would flinch constantly as we continued our grooming behavior, even when we weren't anywhere near touching her skin with the clippers.

My daughter was being on guard because she felt out of control. Somebody was doing something to her that could result in pain and discomfort if done incorrectly, and this gave her the feeling of vulnerability. Once she already experienced the pain of having a toenail cut too short she became extremely hypervigilant, always watching what we did very carefully with heightened anxiety, and always anticipating the possibility of another error in judgment and the potentiality for pain.

After several months of this, and at her demand, we decided to hand the clippers over to her, and, under our watchful guidance at first, she began to cut her nails by herself. Because she was now controlling the speed of the cutting and the specific parts of the nails that were being cut, she became more relaxed, and was able to cut them closer to the skin.

When people are anxious about doing something, when they struggle with confronting a fear, if another person attempts to force them to confront that fear, it usually results in an escalation of the fear, and, when possible, the "digging in of their heels." They will resist or even refuse, sometimes even rebel by arguing or fighting back in some way. Pushing harder will often result in even greater rebellion. This happens because dealing with a fear engenders a sense of not being in control. When it is dictated to you that you must confront that fear, those feelings of not being in control become even greater, resulting in even greater levels of the fear, and ultimately greater resistance to confronting it. The final result is behavioral paralysis- avoidance of the feared object or behavior and the suspension of the process of getting over the fear.

This is why, in the treatment of OCD, it is best if the speed and direction of the treatment is determined by the person with the disorder, and not the therapist or a family member. When I first introduce the concept of exposure treatment to clients in therapy, I explain the nature of the therapeutic relationship. "We are driving in the car together, you and I," I say. "You are in the driver's seat, with your hands on the steering wheel and your feet on the gas and the brake pedals. I'm just the guy in the passenger seat holding the directions and the map." Of course, more recently, in keeping up with technological advances, I identify myself as the GPS.

The main point of the metaphor is to communicate to him that he is in control of the speed and direction of treatment. In so doing, I hope to help allay any concerns that the client may have about being "forced" to confront his fears. This strategy usually results in the client paradoxically confronting his fears faster and to a more intense degree than he would have had I put undo pressure on him to do so. Just like my daughter cutting her toenails, feeling in control of the process of confronting one's fears allows one to move forward more quickly with greater confidence and courage.

Dr. Allen Weg, Vice President of NJ OCF, runs an independent practice in East Brunswick called Stress and Anxiety Services of New Jersey. He is presently completing a book for Oxford University Press which is a collection of stories reflecting the experience and treatment of OCD. This story is one of them. “Being a Parent with OCD” - continued

by Rachel Strohl, Psy.D.

“Parents Tip Sheet:”

- 1) Don't enlist children's help in rituals.
- 2) Do tell your children about having OCD in an age-appropriate manner. She explained that children developmentally are egocentric and appropriately believe the world revolves around them. If parents are distant or repetitive, the child may believe it's his/her fault. Instead, be honest.
- 3) Get spouse or significant other to help negotiate boundaries.

For instance,
 - 4) draw up an “accommodating behaviors” contract.
 - 5) Solicit advice from friends and other parents if not sure. Limit reassurance seeking or excessive surveying of others' opinions.
 - 6) Get proper therapeutic treatment. The empirically based treatment for OCD is cognitive behavioral therapy, specifically exposure and response prevention.
 - 7) Take medication as directed, prescribed by a psychiatrist knowledgeable in OCD.
 - 8) Seek advice of a family therapist if having trouble explaining OCD.
 - 9) Ask yourself these questions:
 - a) Can my children handle this by him/herself?
 - b) Is it better for my child to learn from me in this instance?
 - c) Is it important enough for me to get involved? These questions help to differentiate your beliefs from OCD beliefs.
 - 10) Recognize your children will not perform up to OCD standards.
 - 11) Avoid modeling OCD behaviors, such as excessive washing, cleaning or checking.
 - 12) Think in terms of supervising, not stifling.

And in conclusion,
 - 13) Stay as physically healthy as possible.

Child/Adolescent OCD, Tic, Trich, & Anxiety Group (COTTAGE) at the University of Pennsylvania

Pediatric OCD Treatment Study:

Does your little child have to have things "just right?" Does he have to do something over and over again? Does she have intrusive thoughts? Our center is looking for kids ages 5-8 with OCD to participate in a research study at the University of Pennsylvania. Those eligible receive a full assessment of symptoms and 12 weeks of behavioral therapy at no cost. Call Aubrey Edson at 215-746-3327 if interested.

Pediatric Trichotillomania Treatment Study:

Does your adolescent or teen pull their hair? If so, it may be Trichotillomania. Our group is conducting a research study to assess different treatments for children and teens between 10-17 years old with Trichotillomania. Those eligible receive a full assessment of symptoms and 16 weeks of behavioral therapy at no cost. Call Michelle Wilson at 215-746-3327 if interested.

Family Genetic Study of Tourette Syndrome (TS), Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), & Obsessive Compulsive Disorder (OCD)

We are conducting a research study that focuses on families affected by Tourette Syndrome (TS), Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), and/or Obsessive Compulsive Disorder (OCD). We are looking for common behavioral traits, such as attentional difficulties and impulsivity, which may be shared by these conditions. If found, we want to determine whether these traits are heritable, that is, can be passed down from parents to children. We hope that the information we learn will eventually help researchers to develop better treatments for these conditions.

We are enrolling families in which there is at least one child, 6 years of age or older, who has TS, ADHD and/or OCD, or any combination of these conditions. We would like the whole family (both parents, brothers and sisters) to participate. Subjects will complete interviews, questionnaires and assessments examining areas such as attention, impulsivity, problem-solving, and visual-spatial skills. We will also collect a blood or saliva sample for DNA testing. Study participation is strictly voluntary and may require 3-6 hours per person for the completion of all study tasks. Study visits can be at MGH or in your own home. Families coming to MGH will have parking and meal expenses paid for them. Upon completion of all study tasks, families will be paid $100 for their participation.

If your family meets these criteria and you are interested in learning more about this study, please call the Genetic Family Study at 1-800-471-2730, option 2 or email cillmann@partners.org. Please visit our website at www.ts-adhd-ocd.org.

Do you suffer from OCD?

If you are on medication but still have symptoms, you may be eligible for a treatment study at Columbia University/ NYSPI that would provide medication or cognitive-behavioral therapy at no cost to you (IRB#5188). If you are not on medication, you may be eligible for a brain scan study that will provide payment for your time and treatment at no cost to you (IRB#5494R).

For more information, visit www.columbia-ocd.org or call us for a confidential screening at (212) 543-5367.

TAKING CARE OF YOUR RELATIONSHIP

by Harriet Raynes Thaler, LCSW, LMFT

Many issues can negatively affect relationships - money, in-laws, sex, family secrets, etc. OCD adds another dimension. Power and control are issues in all relationships - there is a definite benefit to the relationship when the distribution of power and control is more equitable.

With OCD present, the power and control issues become more intense and more complex - but they are workable if both parties are willing to look at the interactional patterns that are positive and negative and each person is willing to make change that is productive for the relationship. This goes beyond problem solving - it includes the significant emotional component that can, if negative divide - if positive, heal and foster closeness in the couple relationship. Each person needs to look at how the OCD impacts on the relationship for them.

Read and think about the following interactions. Some are helpful towards building trust and working through conflict in the relationship, others are hurtful and create conflict and distance in the relationship.

Helps and Hurts

Build Trust: Listen to your partner and try to understand not just the words you are hearing, but also the feelings, whether expressed or not. Trust in a relationship is grounded in each person believing they can feel safe talking to their partner about their fears, concerns, their anger, their pain, their failures, their successes, their joy. Example: "I really, really messed up today. I couldn't stop rewriting the report, and I didn't have it ready for the meeting. I wouldn't be surprised if I get fired again."

"You really sound so upset with yourself. That is such a hard place to be."

Don't Match a Negative with a Negative: If your partner is being sarcastic, don't respond with sarcasm. This kind of interaction only escalates the negativity. Example: "Why don't I just throw out the stove and we'll eat out? Then, you won't have to check it over and over again."

"Why don't I just throw you out, and then we don't have to have this conversation over and over again."

Conflict is Not the Problem - It is How You Deal with Conflict that Counts: Conflict in a relationship is a reality. Being able to interact in a caring and affirming manner toward resolving an issue goes a long way toward having a relationship that works well for both parties. Example: "I'm really upset at the amount of time you spend washing your hands. I don't have any time with you."

"I'd much rather be with you than washing my hands again and again. I will continue to work on this so we can have more time together. I do appreciate your patience."

Laying on Guilt and Blame: Be aware of when you are using guilt and blame. They provoke anger and distance. Example:

"You know you make me late for everything, and I'm tired of it."

"You just don't understand my problem. How can you be so cruel?"

Avoidance Breeds Discontent: There is a significant difference between taking time and space to make a decision and consistently putting off making a decision. Example: "Have you made a decision about the vacation? We need to book it this week."

"I'm just bogged down right now. Please don't pressure me. There's so much going on at work, I can't deal with another thing now."

"There is no good time to plan this vacation. It's months of putting it off. I give up!"

Nastiness Deletes Kindness: One act of nastiness can undermine fifty acts of kindness. Put downs, name calling and destructive critical comments deeply wound a relationship. Example:

"What is wrong with you? You're in therapy, but I don't see any improvement."

"What is wrong with you? I have a problem and you're an unsympathetic jerk."

Accentuate the Positive - Give Positive Feedback: Pay attention to what you like and appreciate about your partner, and by all means, SAY SO. Example: "You look really great in that outfit. I love the color on you."

"Well thanks for telling me, because it took me a long time to decide what to wear to this party."

"Well, you made a good decision."

Have a Sense of Humor - Laughter is Healing!

Please note that the examples of dialogue are not exact quotes but simply examples of constructive and destructive interactions.

It is not easy to change destructive patterns - but it can be done. The first step is AWARENESS. Be aware of how you interact. If you attack or become defensive, the interaction escalates negatively. Look at some of the negative interactions in this article and see if you can come up with a thoughtful, positive way of responding which reflects your caring about the other person's feelings. It isn't easy, especially when you are hurt and angry, but it is key to improving a relationship.

WANT TO START A SUPPORT GROUP? WE CAN HELP!

If you look at the back of this Newsletter, you will see that there is only a small handful of support groups for OCD around the state. It is one of the goals of NJ OCF to help create more of these groups. If you are interested in having a group in your area, we can help. Here's how:

1) If you want to have a group, you need to find a place to meet. Local churches, synagogues, libraries, high schools, hospitals, and community mental health centers are good places to find free rooms. If you say you will be working with the NJ Affiliate of the OC Foundation, it might also give you some "clout."

2) Determine the day and time- which may be determined by room space availability- no more than twice a month is needed, and once a month is often a good place to start. An hour and 15 minutes or an hour and a half is usually the length.

3) Contact us. Call Ina Spero at 732-828-0099 (9 a.m. - 9 p.m.). We can put your name and contact number on our website and in our Newsletter. We will announce the formation of your group at our quarterly meetings. Let local mental health professionals and facilities know about the group. Decide if the group is only for adults, only for sufferers, or open to everybody- we recommend the latter- friends, family, and children with OCD.

4) Once you have a few people- 5 is enough to get started, let us know. We will give you some guidelines about how to run the group, provide you with handouts that you can give to members of the group, and answer questions that you may have regarding the mechanics of how to facilitate group discussion.- Don't worry if you've never done anything like this before. We will "hold your hand" in the early phases of the group until you feel more comfortable. WE ARE HERE TO HELP!

5) If you have any questions of a clinical nature regarding running or forming a group, you can phone Dr. Allen Weg at 732-390-6694.

TEENS GROUP IN GLEN RIDGE

NEW TRICHOTILLOMANIA GROUP FORMING IN MERCER CTY/CENTRAL NJ

Looking for women of all ages to participate in a self-led support group. I recently moved from the Boston area, where I was in a support group for fifteen years. The group was immeasurably helpful to me on many levels, and gave all members the rare and wonderful opportunity to help each other live with this challenging disorder. I can't overestimate the benefits of peer support and the freedom to discuss personal issues with women who share them. Please contact me at mercertrich@yahoo.com.
